Review Creators

Lyttelton Harbour Review is a 100% voluntary community newsletter initiative developed after the February 2011 earthquake. It's a Lyttelton Harbour Information Centre initiative produced by Chairperson Wendy Everingham and Committee Member Jenny-Lee Love.

The objective of the Lyttelton Harbour Review is to help keep local residents informed with what is going on in the wider Lyttelton Harbour community. Of course the success of the Lyttelton Harbour Review could not be possible without the ongoing support and enthusiasm from the wider community.

A big thank you goes out to everyone who sends information; is willing to be interviewed or lets us know what might be happening in the neighbourhood. The Lyttelton Harbour Review project would not be possible without you all.

If you have an event, topic, sport announcement, fundraiser or cause that you would like to share with the harbour community, then Wendy or Jenny-Lee would love to hear from you:

Historic Stoddart Cottage officially re-opened

Stoddart Cottage, the oldest building in Diamond Harbour, has officially re-opened to the public after undergoing painstaking earthquake repairs and restoration.

John Riminton from the Stoddart Cottage Trust cuts the ribbon to officially re-open the historic cottage.

Famed as the birthplace of one of New Zealand's foremost painters, the 19th century cottage is a treasured part of Diamond Harbour's colonial past.

"Stoddart Cottage is a small building with a big story to tell," said Andrew Turner, Banks Peninsula Councillor and Deputy Mayor, who was among those to attend a community celebration on Wednesday marking the building's official re-opening.

"It's the birthplace and family home of Margaret Stoddart, one of New Zealand's first professional female artists, and arguably our foremost painter of flowers. The cottage was shipped over from Australia by her father, Mark Stoddart, in 1861, making it one of the oldest homes left in the area and an incredibly rare surviving example of a pre-fabricated Colonial home.

"It's the community's love for this little treasure that has let it keep pride of place in Diamond Harbour, and the fact that we can still enjoy it to this day is testament to the efforts of the Council's Heritage repair team and the Friends of Stoddart Cottage group – which has been taking care of the cottage since 1970," Cr Turner said.

Work on the historic cottage began in October 2016 and included repairing earthquake damage and the roof, reconstruction and strengthening of three chimneys, replacing deteriorated weatherboards and a re-paint of the exterior. A new drainage solution was also installed to protect the property from flooding.

Council is Open to your Ideas

What's Happened - What's Next? A Chat with our Deputy Mayor.

Lyttelton Harbour is certainly getting a reputation for working with the City Council to push boundaries and see what is possible. Deputy Mayor Andrew Turner was reflecting on a few things that have been happening in this neck of the woods recently.

A community idea to have the Lyttelton pool operating for longer hours has been successfully trialled this year. In a first for the city, a hybrid of City Council operation and a community key system supported by the Timebank has worked really well. Pool hours changed from an average of 12-6pm to 7am to 8pm daily. Time bankers supported the council with community lifeguards for school swimming events and public open days and key holders who were time bankers earned credits for keeping the pool site clean and tidy. Community involvement enabled the facility to be more fully utilised meeting the greater needs of the general public.

"The pool trial has been beyond my expectations and I've been very encouraged by the numbers of households who have purchased keys and have used the pool. For myself it's meant I have been able to utilise the pool. The key enabled me to swim before work, this wasn't possible before" he said.

Positive feedback about the system has been filtering to other communities. "I've been getting enquiries from Halswell to see how this might be able to work for them" he said.

"Similarly, the library relocation was a community initiated idea that council was able to facilitate with the community working group. Lyttelton's success encouraged the Brighton community to do the same".

Supporting community initiatives is key to Andrew's vision in his role as Deputy Mayor. He was invited to attend the Living Economies Expo in Lyttelton. A hub of diverse ideas for the economy and society, he was surprised how well attended the event was and the range of people who attended. "The new community facilities worked really well for this event. Recognising community efforts means under this new partnership model between the time bank and the council, facilities for events like this can be paid for with Time credits. When the community supports us, we can support them" he said.

This event and the recent art auction at the school, highlighted the flexibility of the new facilities that Lyttelton now has. Lyttelton Primary School and the Lyttelton Arts Factory have really opened up new community possibilities. "The school is definitely not just a school, it's role has now been broadened and it is a true community facility" he said.

"Council is actively looking for ways to work with communities to get to the best possible outcomes, and the way we are working with the Lyttelton Museum is a really good example of that" he said. With this initiative council land (subject to community consultation) will be gifted to the Museum so that they can build and operate a much needed museum for Lyttelton Harbour. Another interesting idea was raised at the Living Economies Expo, establishment of Land Trusts to help in the provision of affordable housing. "I'm not really aware of this initiative but a good starting point for a discussion with Council about what might be possible would be for community members to present their ideas on this subject to the Community Board so that we can consider what next steps to take from there" he said.

In line with Andrew's hope that Lyttelton Harbour and the entire Peninsula can be a place where Council can pilot new ideas with the community, he also suggested that maybe the Banks Peninsula Community Board be the place to test more devolved delegations from the Council. "Our board is very receptive to new ideas and is enjoying taking a proactive rather than reactive approach. The way we have engaged with this year's annual plan is a good example of this and has resulted in a number of new projects being added into the draft plan at the community board's request. I think we are in a good space to be the place where new ideas can be tried and tested".

Another Amazing Facility Lyttelton's New Fire Station

The recent open day at the Lyttelton Volunteer Fire Brigade introduced the wider community to the wonderful new facility for Lyttelton. Talking with Fire Chief Mark Buckley he said, "The building is really fit for purpose and just what we require". Taking a tour through the interior it is certainly a huge improvement from the former facilities. The fire truck parking bay is very slick and almost feels luxurious from the former concrete shed they had before. It's nice to see firefighters from the past keep an eye on the new bay with historic photos of prior brigades hanging high, looking down on the current team as they go about their emergency duties. The firefighters gear is neatly stored in well-designed clothing bays just behind the vehicles. No jackets hanging on hooks in the open. Everything is neatly packed away.

The interior of the station is home to a series of offices. "We have now got a command and control centre that can host fire, police and ambulance staff in an emergency" said Mark. This is a great improvement for Lyttelton. The building could become an entire emergency services and welfare centre if needed. A large training area is also part of the complex. It is noticeable how the whole facility looks like a home away from home for the 28 volunteers and their families whose lives evolve around the station.

A wonderful family type room fills the entire back of the building. Hosting a brilliant kitchen, seating area, TV, and a great deck that you can see will be well used. This space also works well for all the training exercises that the team are involved with. The space has a community feel to it. Mark explains that the firefighter's families are key to the entire complex. "This hub is just as much for them as anyone else" he says.

Interestingly the team has almost a full complement so that is certainly a vote of confidence in the existing management team. There are a total of 30 volunteers at the Lyttelton Station. "Our squad is almost at capacity. We currently have 28 volunteers". Not all volunteers fight fires. Some act as support staff looking after PR, finances and traffic control.

Readers might be interested to know that the team is made up of men and women. Currently Brenda Hurl is the Secretary and Mel Rapley the Treasurer, Candice Milner and Zoe Harris are some of the firefighting team. Mark Buckley is the fire chief and his second in charge is Dwyane Pool. If you would like to know more about what they do or would like to join the team they will be very happy to hear from you.

The community day was a great success with many community members taking the opportunity to take a look at the facility. Brigade members were certainly happy to show off their new digs.

Quirky Campaign

Bring the Cruise Ships Back

Have you noticed these small little cruise ships popping up all over the place? The brainchild of Rob DeThier, Chair of the Lyttelton Harbour Business Association, he's adding some light-hearted pressure to keep cruise ships at the fore of people's minds. Whilst flicking through an LHBA's member's business catalogue he spied these little stress balls and thought they were the perfect way to make a statement.

Tired of the aggressiveness of campaigning Rob thought by adding some humour into the campaign a good subtle message would be sent that the return of cruise ships is still a very important message for this town. "Our team at the Lyttelton Harbour Business Association have been distributing these little gems to all the businesses and people who we think might be able to make some difference" he said. To date they are at most township businesses and several local politicians have received them. "I've given MP Nuk Korako some and I trust that MP Gerry Brownlee might have one in his hand shortly" he said.

In the near future, Deputy Mayor Andrew Turner is coming to address the LHBA and he will be tasked with sharing these treasures with the wider council. There is also a date set to meet with the CEO of Lyttelton Port Company and the wider board.

If you want cruise ships back and you can think of other people who need a subtle reminder, get in touch with Rob DeThier and he can send some your way.

Restoration complete on historic stone shelter

An historic stone shelter that sits at the top of the Bridle Path and honours the pioneering women who courageously came to Christchurch in the mid 19th century has been restored.

The hexagonal-shaped shelter was built using volcanic stone and is a well-known landmark on the Bridle Path – the route used by the first settlers to cross the Port Hills from Lyttelton to the fledgling settlement of Christchurch.

Perched atop the summit, where the early settlers first viewed the Canterbury Plains and the site for Christchurch after their long sea journey, the shelter still offers great views of the Canterbury Plains as well as Lyttelton Harbour.

The shelter bears the inscription They Passed This Way and was built to commemorate the courage and hard work of the women who were among the early English settlers. Like many of Christchurch's historic stone buildings the shelter was damaged in the earthquakes but over the past few months it has been carefully restored.

"We're thrilled that we've been able to restore this historic landmark and that it can once again provide a resting point for those making the trip over the Bridle Path," said Christchurch City Council Heritage Programme Manager Richie Moyle.

"It's a wonderful spot to sit and imagine what it was like for the pioneers who arrived here and to reflect on how things have changed."

Mr Moyle said there was still one remaining item in the historic shelter awaiting restoration – a memorial plaque depicting the pioneer women and their children arriving in the district.

The bronze plaque carries the words: 'On this spot the pioneer women of Canterbury and their children rested after their climb from the Port of Lyttelton and gazed with awe but courage upon the hills and plains of Canterbury where they were to make their home.'

"Sadly the decorative middle section of the plaque has been stolen, but we are having it re-cast and hope to have it back in place within a few months. It will be the final piece in the jigsaw," Mr Moyle said.

Introducing Orlando and Pearl

Orlando trotted along the Lyttelton Wharf, passing the old men sitting on the jetty fishing, their cigarettes dangling from their lips and up the gang plank of the most recently docked fishing boat.

It was big, and to Orlando's delicate cat nose, it reeked.

'Washing!' Cried Orlando.

'Cheap laundry services!', she hollered, sticking her nose into all the cabins. She soon had a small group of sailors around her, and explained to them that if they brought their laundry bags up the hill to the cottage on Cressy Tce, they'd have a significantly cheaper service. Most of the small group of sailors opted to have their laundry bags collected, but one young sailor chose to carry his up the hill. He shrugged the bag onto his shoulders and he and the cat set out up the hill, glancing now and then to the harbour on their left and the hill rising up on their right.

Across the road from the little tennis court Orlando stopped, and slunk through a gate to a pretty little cottage nestled into the arms of the hill rising behind it. Orlando stopped on the verandah and waited as the man unslung his bag of laundry and bent to place the sixpence coin on the top. Orlando intercepted the move and took it from him, humans had no idea sometime! She gently bit it out of his hand.

Orlando tossed the coin up in the air and caught it again in her teeth like an errant bird, she winked at the sailor and told him to return at the end of the day, then she glanced into the cottage at Pearl, who stood over the copper with steam curling around her head. The goat peered back at the cat out of the window, it was a Nor'Wester wind, the characteristic arch of clouds decorating the sky and the wind gently ruffling the cats bicolored coat. The goat nodded curtly and went back to plunging her hooves into the hot rinse water. They had much to do before their human came to hang the clothes in the warm wind.

Their human was a useful addition to their team Orlando thought as she watched the woman hanging the last of the sailors' clothes. Hands were 'handy' she joked to herself, but she never felt the desire to be a human just for that, she loved the freedom of being a cat. She wound herself around the woman's ankles to thank her, and at the same time scent mark her. She smiled up at the woman who bent to scratch her behind the ears before she scampered off and into another room of the little cottage on Cressy Terrace that she shared with her friend the goat. She came prancing out the door moments later holding two fat coins in her mouth which she dropped in the bottom of the empty willow wash basket. The woman smiled, and bent to retrieve them, and give Orlando a final stroke on her brindle head. The cat purred, the woman rolled down her sleeves and gathered her coat to leave, turning abruptly to motion with her hands that she would come again tomorrow.

'Yes, handy,' Orlando thought again, laughing at her own clever joke. She cocked her head to one side and said 'yes,' with a cat 'kiss' which was a slow blink. The woman smiled, understanding, and gave the cat a little wave before she left.

Orlando stretched her back and shot up her favourite tree, 'time to be free,' she thought and glancing back she saw Pearl coming around the corner of the house, sans apron, on all fours, with a daisy dangling from her mouth.

Lyttelton Museum closer to getting new home

After six years in the cold, Lyttelton's museum could return to a new, prime location if a Council proposal wins public support. The museum's former building on Gladstone Quay was demolished after it was badly damaged in the 2010 and 2011 earthquakes leaving the museum homeless.

At a meeting today Christchurch City Council supported in principal a proposal to gift a Council-owned site at 33 and 35 London Street to the Lyttelton Historical Museum Society. The land would be used as the location for a new museum building. The proposal will now need to go through community consultation. Following the consultation process another report will be brought to the Council on whether the gifting plan should go ahead. The Council has backed the proposal because it believes it would bring significant cultural and benefits to the people of Lyttelton and provide a unique tourism attraction.

A mechanism would be put in place to ensure the land would be transferred back to Council ownership in the future if it is no longer needed by the museum.

Lyttelton Historical Museum Society Chairman Peter Rough is delighted that progress is being made towards a new museum for Lyttelton. The society had put a request to Banks Peninsula Community Board for the London Street site because it was ideal for a new museum, placing it at the heart of its community and creating a hub with other nearby community facilities such as the Lyttelton Library and Albion Square.

It has already chosen Christchurch architects Warren and Mahoney to design a new museum building which could have three or four levels. Mr Rough hopes a final decision on the land will be made within a month because the goal is to have a new museum ready for opening in 2019. It has $600,000 for the project but estimates it will need to raise another $5.3 million to construct the building and help with operational costs.

The Banks Peninsula Community Board has given its support to the Council gifting the land. At present the 316 sqm section is empty, but it previously housed a Council Service Centre that had to be demolished. In the meantime, the society, which is a registered charity, will work with Warren and Mahoney on a building brief. "We're at the start of that process," Mr Rough says. "Before the architects can begin to design a building for us, they need to understand what our practical requirements are, as well as how we want to use the spaces."

More than 8500 museum items have been catalogued and are currently in storage including significant artefacts from maritime, military and naval history. The society expects more than 10,000 people a year would visit a new museum.

Fiona Short, one of the architects who will be working on the museum project, said it had the opportunity to be a real catalyst in Lyttelton's cultural landscape.

"I want the museum to be more than a building which stores and exhibits objects – it can engage with the community to share and celebrate their stories."

The Big Shift: Rethinking Money, Tax, Welfare and Governance for the Next Economic System

Deirdre Kent

This book was launched at the Living Economies EXPO, 31st March – 2nd April, in Lyttelton. Many of the topics in it were discussed during the three days of inspiring presentations, panels, Open Space discussions and free-time chats.

It's a very short book, 93 pages, and can easily be read in one morning if you don't follow up on the many footnotes indicating useful backup information in books (some in LIFT) and online links. Most of it will be easily understood by the common reader with no background in economics, because it is full of real examples of failures and successes of various methods of managing economic systems.

Unlike most books on the topic, the author presents on p.5 a summary of the book's proposed new system, so you don't have to plough through the background to reach the conclusions. Then you get the detailed proposals, with examples of past and present failures that cause the need for change, and successes proving the value of the suggestions. Climate change is one of the big risks the world faces, especially with the fossil fuel issue, bringing the need for action now in the economic world, if we want to successfully adapt to the next economic collapse. Buckminster Fuller is quoted: "You never change things by fighting the existing reality. To change something, build a new model that makes the existing model obsolete." This book's new model will include a money system, a tax-and-dividend system and a partnership model of governance.

- From bank-created money to a consciously designed and publicly created and controlled currency.
- From 'ownership' of land and resources to sharing the values of the commons.
- From domination to partnership.

Why should a reader who is not an economist read this book?

"Though banks and oil giants have size going for them and 'corporations rule the world', their size is also their weakness.....Smaller groups can be more nimble." Think of the effectiveness in NZ of the waves of small-group action in the anti-smoking movement, and the Nuclear-Free groups. "If small communities reassert their right to govern and reclaim some major functions, the corporations won't know who to sue first."

And here in Lyttelton and greater Christchurch we already are stepping along the way of transition, for example with worker cooperatives, social enterprises, savings pools (and hopefully Christchurch dollars); in other parts of New Zealand other initiatives have been set up – land value rating (local tax) systems in Wellington and Napier, and a community land trust for Kotare village; and public banks rather than private have been hugely successful in the BRIC countries.

The book concludes with 20 brief statements of the positive results of this "BIG SHIFT". My favourite is "No.2 - New life in industry, and a sea change in horticultural and agriculture methods." But I applaud all of them!

2Graves April 18th – 29th Lyttelton Arts Factory

"Powerful & enthralling .. a bloody good show" Theatreview, 19 April

Bobby Tops is riding on the crest of a wave, poised to take the crown at the 1978 World Professional Darts Championship. Only now he's dead. His son Jack seeks his revenge on those he believes are responsible for his father's downfall - and we're with him every step of the way as life turns him from adoring son to hard-bitten criminal. Two Graves is a gripping piece of contemporary verse which explores the terrifying dangers of violence and revenge.

Recommended for age 16+, running time approx 80 mins (no interval).
