NEW END-OF-SEASON MEMBERSHIP FOR LYTTTELTON POOL

A new end-of-season membership has been introduced at Lyttelton's Norman Kirk Memorial Summer Pool, which will open along with Council's four other outdoor pools on 16 November.

The pool has its usual full summer season membership in place for $160, but will also offer a second tier of membership valid from 1 February 2020 until 29 March 2020 for $80. Key holders will have access to the pool from 7am until 8pm every day of the week, with all members required to complete a 30 minute safety induction.

Christchurch City Council's Head of Recreation, Sports and Events Nigel Cox is sure the community will welcome the additional membership option.

"The newly introduced end-of-season membership will be great for people who are away over the holiday period, but want to utilise it once they are back home" Mr Cox says.

"The community will enjoy the extended opening hours. There's nothing more Kiwi than summer nights in the pool with your family and friends."

Lifeguards will only be based at the pool from 16 November until 2 February, between 11.30am and 7pm, during which time casual users are also able to access the facility at a rate of $6.20 per adult and $3.60 per child.

After this time casual users will be able to use the facility when they are with a member, paying via an honesty box.

Membership payments for Norman Kirk Memorial Summer Pool can be made at the Lyttelton Library and Service Centre (Service Centre hours only), Canterbury Street, Lyttelton. Keys will be given out once safety inductions are held at the pool.

CHAIRPERSON AND DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON ELECTED AT INAUGURAL MEETING OF NEW COUNCIL

Chairperson and Deputy Chairperson have been elected at the inaugural meeting of Environment Canterbury's Council.

Christchurch North-East – Ōrei Regional Councillor Jenny Hughey has been elected chair of Environment Canterbury at the inaugural meeting.

South Canterbury – Ōtuhituhi councillor Peter Scott, deputy chair during the last triennium, was re-elected to the role after a vote tied 7-7 saw his name drawn ahead of North Canterbury – Ōpukepuke councillor Claire McKay, who had also been nominated.

Cr Hughey was the only nomination for chair. She has a master's degree in law and has spent 11 years in governance and community support and leadership roles at Christchurch City Council, and has been an Environmental Inquiry Commissioner.

Cr Scott is a mixed-crop farmer. As well as deputy chair, Cr Scott also had portfolio responsibilities for Air Quality, Regional Transport and Freshwater during the last triennium.

Cr Scott was nominated for deputy by Christchurch Central – Ōhoko councillor Lan Pham and seconded by Christchurch South – Ōwhanga councillor Vicky Southworth.

Cr McKay was nominated for deputy chair by Mid Canterbury – Ōpakihi councillor John Sunckell and seconded by Christchurch South – Ōwhanga councillor Phil Clearwater.

Following a mihi whakatau to formally welcome the new council at Environment Canterbury's Christchurch office this morning, Councillors were sworn in, with the adoption of standing orders and election of the chair and deputy the only order of business for the inaugural meeting.

The Council will next meet on 14 November.

FEATHERS IN FOCUS

CERAMICS AND PHOTOGRAPHS BY CHRISTINE DAVEY

1 – 24 NOVEMBER 2019

Christine Davey is having an exhibition of her lustrous ceramics together with colour photographs at Stoddart Cottage Gallery in Diamond Harbour, running for four weeks in November. This exhibition celebrates her love of birds.

Davey was born and raised in Governor's Bay and still lives there. The local environment influences her ceramic pieces, whether it be the clay she uses, the design, or the firing process which may involve seaweed, shells or salt water. She has always loved the bird life in the bay and now uses photographs to inspire her ceramics.

Christine Davey is a 'raku' specialist as it suits her sculptural forms. "I enjoy the excitement of the firing where your pieces are removed at a thousand degrees centigrade from a special kiln and placed into combustibles. At this stage the piece is so hot it is translucent, like molten glass. Quite beautiful," she says. "The metallic results are unpredictable but sometimes stunning which keeps you returning to try for perfection." One of her raku pieces was purchased by the Canterbury Museum in 2010.

A former member of Mount Pleasant Pottery Group and current member of Halswell Pottery Group, Davey helped establish a small pottery group in Governor's Bay which has been running for twenty years.

Christine Davey has entered several exhibitions and has many pieces in private collections. She has a raku entry in the upcoming 2019 Peninsula Art Auction.

Stoddart Cottage Gallery is located in historic Stoddart Cottage, birthplace of well-known Canterbury impressionist Margaret Stoddart (1865 -1934). It is just a short walk up from the Diamond Harbour ferry.

Stoddart Cottage is open to the public every Friday, Saturday and Sunday from 10am – 4pm. It will be open on Show Day Friday as well.

SAFETY THE KEY MESSAGE FOR BOATIES HEADING INTO SUMMER

Navigation Safety Officer Gary Manch wants safety to be at the forefront of people's minds before they head back to the water this summer. Manch, Environment Canterbury's navigation safety officer, said people could expect to see more boats, jet skis and paddle craft on the water from next weekend.

"The main thing we want to stress to people throughout Canterbury is that by taking the correct safety precautions, they can return home safe to their families after a day on the water," Manch said.

'Prep, check, know'

New Zealand's first Water Safety Month was launched in Auckland this month because too many people are dying in New Zealand waters. Maritime New Zealand will start the month with Safer Boating Week beginning on Monday. The theme is "prep, check, know" – prep your boat, check your gear and know the rules before getting back on the water.

Manch said that was a valuable message for boaties of all levels.

"Now is the time to test and check your equipment following winter to ensure everything is up to speed for the summer."

Canterbury has seen a rise in paddleboarders recently and Manch said they needed to be mindful of the conditions.

"Wearing a lifejacket and being comfortable in the area you are paddleboarding is important," Manch said.

"Also, ensuring you have a tether will help you remain safe."

'No Excuses' this summer

Environment Canterbury is one of 18 regulatory bodies from around New Zealand that will take part in the 'No Excuses' campaign this summer.

The fourth annual campaign began on October 12 and involves harbourmasters and Maritime New Zealand maritime officers working side by side for at least five random days in each region during the summer.

The Maritime Transport Act and council bylaws require lifejackets to be carried and worn and for boats, including jet skis, to travel at five knots or less within 200 metres of shore and divers, and within 50 metres of swimmers and other boats. Infringement notices of up to $300 can be issued for boaties who break these rules.

Manch said the main problem among Canterbury boaties last summer was people exceeding the five-knot speed limit, but lifejacket compliance was strong.

LOCAL TEENAGER IN WINNING TEAM

BUSINESS IDEA SUPPORTED

At a special ceremony at ARA Institute on October 22nd a group of Cashmere High Students were the winners of the Canterbury Regional Youth Enterprise Scheme. Lyttelton local Finn McCabe was one of the team of four who were successful. The team – Finn McCabe, Eddie Hogan, Lukas Hornell and Joshua McKernan created a business called JELF.

The four are in their final year studying business related subjects.

“As part of our final year business studies we were enrolled in the Youth Enterprise Scheme. It is part of our schools curriculum and is a hands on way for young people to get experience in all aspects of a business”, said Finn.

At the start of this school year, 132 teams enrolled in the Youth Enterprise Scheme from Canterbury High Schools. All the teams had to undertake a series of activities to develop a business. Points were awarded for the tasks they had to undertake. The six finalists were chosen based on the six highest marked scored.

“We had to develop everything for the business from scratch. This included product development, sales and marketing plans, financial budgets and communications” said Finn.

Not only did the teams have to learn all these skills they had to reach out to mentors who also helped them gain the skills they needed for the businesses to take shape. Along the way this included amazing business experiences visiting Bangladesh and Chile.

The top six teams were invited to the special awards night and in a panel situation similar to “The Apprentice” the teams went through their paces explaining their business ideas to a panel. Finn’s team had to sell their new product to the judges. He was the designated spokesperson and held the Communications role for the enterprise.

Just what was he trying to sell? The team came up with a new eco-friendly laminating pouch. They developed compostable pouches made out of biopolymers that degrade very quickly in the appropriate waste facility. The pouches are currently in A4 sizes. What they were particularly proud of was that getting people to use these pouches would be the same as if they were using any normal pouch.

“There is no behaviour change required other than to purchase this different product”, said Finn.

Winning the Regional Final has certainly given the team a very positive indicator that they do have a very good business idea that has commercial possibilities. Finn was very excited about the next stage. The team are heading to Wellington on December 4th to compete in the national competition for the best New Zealand Young Enterprise. In addition to going to the final they were also awarded the Regional Excellence Award in Innovation.

Interestingly when quizzed about the significance of the business name, Finn said at the start of the school year and with little time to think of a very inventive name for their business, the foursome named their business using a combination of the first letters of each of their names!

If you would like more information about this business idea or would like to make contact visit jelf.co.nz or email finn@jelf.co.nz

INTREPID ENTERTAINER

When a play named Promise and Promiscuity announces that it is a new musical from Jane Austen and Penny Ashton I am curious and a little excited! Jane Austen maybe long gone from this world physically but the love of her writing endures and the characters she created are so recognisable. Penny's love of Jane (and very distant family connection) drove her to build a show for herself to portray many of the characters of the story, wear empire lines and bonnets with confidence and throw in the occasional pop culture reference all in the name of comedy! The clarity of her performance ensure that the characters are clear and make you laugh and love as Jane intended. It has been a true hit and now we are lucky enough to have this world travelled show come to our Port town from 7th to 9th November at the LAF.

My investigations of this intrepid entertainer took me to her website www.hotpink.co.nz where I see a wealth of reviews singing her praises but none so excellent as her own line; ...'poet, MC, Comedienne, Actor, Social commentator, TV presenter, Voice over artist, improviser, Wedding celebrant and all round show off.' Penny, originally a Cantabrian has been around the world 'showing off' and is doing very well at it. Chatting to her I become amazed at how busy life can be when you have so many job titles, but she clearly loves the variety and the jobs she does. She is developing a new cast musical show and has another that she tours with, each play around with the literary classics that even if we have not read them we know the stories. Whilst these shows are aimed at the over 13 audience she does not forget the little people. Noting that all children love to dance 'Captain Pinky's pirate toddler boogie' has come about. What a superb excuse for dressing up as a pirate and jumping about!...adults do need to have a child with them though! Saturday, 9th November at 10.30am take your toddlers to the Lyttelton Arts Factory and take part in pirate adventures, singing and some swashbuckling dancing.

I am looking forward to the arrival of this performer and her shows as we can all do with a good laugh sometimes.

Tickets for Captain Pinky's pirate boogie on Sat 9th Nov @ 10.30am - $10 and Promise and Promiscuity on Thurs 7th, Fri 8th, Sat 9th @ 7.30pm - $30 and are available from www.laf.co.nz or linked through the website www.hotpink.co.nz

PLANTS COLLECTED BY ENDEAVOUR BOTANISTS GO ON DISPLAY

Plant samples gathered 250 years ago by the botanists on James Cook's Endeavour expedition feature in a new exhibition at Canterbury Museum.

He Uru Hou: Our Native Plants, at the Canterbury Museum until 9 February 2020, brings together Māori and European ways of understanding Aotearoa New Zealand's flora.

The plant specimens, on loan from the Allan Herbarium at Manaaki Whenua Landcare Research, were gathered in 1769 by Joseph Banks and Daniel Solander. They are the oldest of the herbarium's 620,000 specimens.

Banks and Solander pressed the samples to preserve them. After the expedition returned to England, the plants formed the basis of Banks' Primitiae Florae Novae Zelandiae (beginnings of a New Zealand flora). He Uru Hou displays the plant samples alongside tools, clothing, musical instruments and other objects made by Māori from native plants.

These taonga illustrate the wide extent of Māori plant knowledge when the Endeavour arrived in 1769. Exhibition Curator Cor Vink says it's great that the 250-year-old plant samples were returned to New Zealand and that they still exist. Banks and Solander were the first to analyse New Zealand plants using European scientific methods.

"Their samples are a reminder of a significant event in our history. We're really grateful to Landcare Research for lending them to us," he says.

Exhibition Curator Emma Brooks says He Uru Hou commemorates both cultures' first encounters with the flora of Aotearoa New Zealand.

"The East Polynesian ancestors of Māori had faced similar challenges to Banks and Solander when they arrived here 500 years earlier and encountered many new plant species.

"By the time the Endeavour arrived, Māori had extensive knowledge of and a wide range of uses, many of them quite ingenious, for our native plants."

COMMUNITY SURVEY - WHAT WE DISCOVERED

Last week the findings from the community survey that Project Lyttelton commissioned Susan O'Meagher a local researcher to undertake, were presented to an enthusiastic audience.

Background details such as population figures, ethnicity, age and income from census data painted the broad picture. The survey added finer detail.

382 people (over 13 years) participated in the survey giving a confidence level of 95% to the accuracy of the outcomes.

The audience was made up of representatives of many groups and individuals who engaged in spirited conversation about what the results could mean for the community.

Some of the results might have been predictable by those thinking about the community – such as in the “Us – them – old – new” section but this actually showed the differences in time living here made very little difference to our understanding.

The reasons why people live and work in Lyttelton vary but there are commonalities summed up in one respondent's comment, ‘The sense of community. The views’. Other comments for living here included the landscape, the vibe, friendly, community, outdoors. What was obvious was that we all love this place.

The respondents were asked what they saw as the greatest needs. Common responses included ‘connection, recreation, business, youth, affordable housing, police, value diversity, earthquake repairs, acceptance, civic maintenance and elders.

In response to ‘how connected do you feel with the Lyttelton community?’ almost 25% felt not connected or only somewhat connected. These people were new comers or the highest level of feeling only somewhat connected was amongst working adults in the 25-44 age range, also those who have been in Lyttelton for over 40 years. Comments like...‘I find online forums (facebook) aggressive and unwelcoming’...‘the community has grown apart in the last 10-15 years’.

Shared values saw kindness as being the most important. Other significant values included respect, integrity and creativity.

Steve Targus from the Top Club facilitated the conversation around the implications of the results.

An example of this part of the conversation was around affordable housing. Weaving in the facts that although we want and appreciate community a section of the population feels only somewhat connected, there was a desire to move forward as a whole community rather than in isolated groups. The census data shows that there is a significant sector of households on high incomes. The Catholic Church land will likely come on the market soon.

Land Trusts are a pathway to affordable housing. Could the community work as a whole and raise money to buy the Catholic land and put it in a Land Trust for affordable housing?

HALLOWEEN 2019 PICS

SANDY CASSELS

Friends

Rex Harrison - Diamond Harbour Writers Group

Sometimes friends can appear in the most unlikely places.

In the early 1970s Yellowstone National Park, once the jewel in the crown of the American national park system, was in trouble. Vegetation was receding. Browsing animals were faced with increasing scarcity. As cover retreated waterways became subject to seasonal flooding and droughts. Beaver had declined in numbers, exacerbating the problems with streams and creeks.

Habitat for fish and waterfowl deteriorated. Wolves were absent, endangered.

It took some 20 years, but eventually the National Park Service gained permission to restock the park with wolves. From 1995 to 1997 they brought 41 grey wolves from Canada. They thrived. And the park began to recover. How did that happen?

The wolves reduced the number of browsing animals, particularly elk. This allowed trees and understory to recover. This in turn provided more food for beaver, who promptly began building more dams. Seasonal floods and droughts were all but eliminated. The dams provided habitat for fish and birdlife, and stable supplies of water for other species. Yellowstone is well on the way to returning to being the jewel in the crown of the national park system.

Wolves, it seems, turned out to be friends of the park. Sometimes you have to look at the big picture to recognise a friend.

People can also encounter friends in unlikely places. Here is a story from the romantic past of Persia.

A young man had lost the whereabouts of his finance beloved. He roamed the alleys and byways of his city, searched the bazaars and souks, but could find no trace of her. In his despair he took to wandering the streets at night, peering into every nook and cranny, seeking any trace of his beloved, but to no avail.

One night when the citizenry were abed, he attracted the attention of a watchman. And another. They chased him through the streets, seeking to rid the city of this suspicious wanderer. The young man cried out in despair. His quest for his beloved was about to dashed into a tragic end. "How could this happen to me?" he sobbed. "Surely these watchmen are jinn sent by the devil to torment me, to rob me of all hope."

His flight took him to a street that ended in a sheer wall, with no escape, and no way back. He had no choice but to scale the wall, lamenting his fate and cursing the watchmen. He reached the top with great difficulty, and abandoning hope and reason, flung himself into the garden below. In his despair he cared nought for the fate that awaited him at the end of his fall.

And there, in the garden, was his beloved, holding a lamp, searching for a ring she had lost.

"Those watchmen we not jinn", he cried, "but angels sent to rescue me from my anguish of separation and re-unite my with my beloved. They were true friends".

Sometimes you have to look at the big picture to recognise a friend.

STEELE MARINE SERVICES

STORY CHATS DUNCAN

The SIS agent was around Jack's height but slightly stooped, aged around sixty, with grey hair above a rugged face.

'So, gentlemen, you understand why we must establish what this seabed object is, and Incidentally, if approached, would you be willing to find it?'

Jack was intrigued, even a little flattered.

'What straight away? Jack responded.

'Yes, the tides are favourable tomorrow. The government needs to know just what we are dealing with here.'

Jack stood up and looked out through his workshop window, a yacht was sliding into place in the haul-out area. He knew the boat well, having re-wired her electrics the year before.

'What do you think, Tim?'

Jack asked his long-term friend and business partner. They had served together in the New Zealand police dive squad, until an unfortunate accident cost Tim the full use of his left arm. When he was invalided out, Jack resigned from the force and later Tim joined his business - Steele Marine Services, boat repairs, mooring maintenance and boat deliveries.

'Just this one job, right, we're not on call for anything else, are we?' Tim queried.

'No, just this one job,' the agent confirmed. Jack turned and gave Tim a thumbs up, who raised a thumb in agreement; Jack held out his hand saying, 'You're on, Gerry, where do we sign?'

Tim steered the inflatable towards the GPS location. They had allocated three hours for the job, but he wondered if they should have allowed more.

Agent Gerry Stapleton re-read the encrypted message before sending it to HQ, confirming the chosen underwater operatives were now in place. Gerry, was the most senior agent in New Zealand's Security Intelligence Service, and led this covert operation; rating it highly confidential and politically sensitive. All information headed.

SECRET - PM's EYES ONLY

The situation arose when a Lyttelton fishing boat returned with a poor catch. Its skipper wondered if his fish finder sonar was at fault, so he rang Steele Marine for advice. When Jack and Tim arrived, they ran through some functional tests and closely inspected the CHIRP sonar records the skipper had made of the seabed. Tim saw it first.

'Hey Jack, take a look at this, it looks like a whale or something.'

'Wow! Whatever it is, it needs reporting,' said Jack, 'and I know who to tell.'

He reached for his mobile and spoke to his brother, Dave, who worked in the offices of the New Zealand Security Intelligence Service. Things moved rapidly after that and hours later they had agreed to find the object, lying in 17 metres of water off Lyttelton heads.

Dressed in scuba diving gear, checked over by Tim, Jack tipped backwards off the boat into the water. Surfacing he removed his facemask, spat in it and wiped the inside surface, to prevent it misting up, before slipping it back on. Tim passed him the underwater camera, before seeing him upend and swim down the guiding shot line they had lowered. It was slack water and surprisingly calm. The outline soon appeared below and despite knowing it was only three metres in length, it seemed larger to Jack. He moved slowly over the target area recording a video. Steel wires from lost fishing nets held tight the diving planes of a midget submarine, preventing it from moving.

The Security Intelligence Service confirmed the submarine was not owned by the NZ defence forces. The SIS informed the Prime Minister of its presence, advising that the submarine could pose a possible threat to shipping and even national security. The PM decided to have the vessel secretly destroyed, and deny any knowledge of its existence. Steele Marine were chosen to lay the explosives, so distancing her government from any possible fallout.

As evening approached the following day, Jack and Tim returned to the submarine's location. They had been schooled overnight on how to attach the explosives by the Defence Bomb Squad. It took Jack less than twenty minutes to carry out the work. Hours later, after-dark, the pair watched the remotely controlled detonation by the Bomb Squad, to ensure nobody else witnessed it. From a safe distance of half a kilometre away they were amazed by the size of the explosion. Water sprayed upwards some thirty metres, together with a loud whump! They gave each other high fives and headed for home.

Two weeks later the Steele Marine partners were invited to the Beehive in Wellington to meet the Prime Minister. She congratulated them on stepping forward when needed and presenting them with a cleverly worded, beautifully framed, citation of appreciation. Next day Jack was checking the company's bank accounts, when he discovered a substantial deposit, listed as a tax rebate.
