Public Transport Level 2

Canterbury is now at Alert Level 2. Here's what you need to know when using public transport.

Do you need to take the bus during Alert Level 2?

Environment Canterbury is reminding people that while Canterbury is at Alert Level 2, capacity will be very constrained on the urban public transport network, and at times there will not be enough space for everyone.

"Where people have a choice, we ask that you please avoid travelling at our peak times of 7am-9am and 2.30pm-5.30pm, weekdays," said Environment Canterbury senior manager public transport Stewart Gibbon.

"The physical distancing restrictions in place to keep everyone safe on buses create real challenges in providing the level of service needed for everyone that uses public transport.

"We are asking people to consider alternative ways to get around or to consider if they can travel at a different time. Could you bike or carpool, or start work earlier or later to avoid the peak? Ultimately, only travel on the bus network if you really need to, especially during peak times."

School services

The Metro school bus network will continue to operate at full capacity throughout Alert Level 2, due to schools' ability to contact trace.

"However, as a lot of school children also use the urban buses, it's important that they, and their parents, are aware of the capacity constraints we face under Alert Level 2," said Gibbon.

Physical distancing

When onboard, sit in window seats only where possible, unless sitting next to someone you know. Signage will be in place from later this week.

Wearing a mask is advised, especially in situations where physical distancing can be difficult.

Gibbon confirms that the Bus Interchange remains open, and front door boarding will remain in place, however passengers should alight via the rear doors only, unless they need to use the ramp.

Information centre update

It is not that often that I head through the tunnel and head into the city however on a school trip last week I was drawn into the city with focus upon the new Maori cultural narrative that can be found around the city in its buildings, pavements and open spaces. It was so interesting and an opportunity to see another side of the city away from shopping and buildings.

Starting from the Margaret Mahy playground we found the start of 'Ngā Whāriki Manaaki' – woven mats of welcome, a series of 13 weaving patterns that feature within the Te Papa Ōtākaro/Avon river precinct. Each Whāriki is an arrangement of natural stone pavers of varying shades and colours and in sequence welcome all visitors coming into the city and support the Ngāi Tahu guiding principle of 'Kia atawhai ki te iwi', Care for your people. It was a lovely stroll west along the river to follow the trail, seeing how each Whāriki varied from the next and around each stop looking at the city in its continuing development. So often we are in a hurry to get from place to place, things to do, that it was a pleasure to take the time to stop and look around.

The Avon River has so much going on along its edge that following this trail you are able to see, Antony Gormley's sculpture still 'Thinking' in the river; Tuna/eels from the steps of the terrace and have the opportunity to sit and watch the world go by from the choice of a bench, café or bar. The Riverside market bursting with all food types offers a food stop or a quick pick up to take with you as you continue along the river. This continuation takes you past the restful and respectful Earthquake Memorial, wall of remembrance and further on into The Botanic Gardens. A well thought out and enjoyable trail.

It is fantastic to see that time has been taken to rebuild this city embracing the cultures and stories that influenced the growth of Otautahi/Christchurch. It is good to pop in every now and again to see how things are moving along. So take a morning or an afternoon and head into The City have a wander along the river, I recommend it.

Coastal Hazards Working Group

A working group made up of Councillors and two members from Te Rūnanaga o Ngāi Tahu will help guide two important projects relating to the impact of climate change on the coastal hazards risk in Christchurch and Banks Peninsula. The working group was formally established by Christchurch City Council at its meeting today.

"We're at an early stage of looking at how we respond to climate change and the potential risks posed by coastal hazards. These issues are complex and we are going to need to engage extensively with our communities as we work through them" says Acting Mayor Andrew Turner.

"The working group we established today will provide advice and give feedback to Council staff on how to best approach the issues in a way that ensures both the affected communities, and the city as a whole, are kept informed and are actively and properly engaged in decision-making.

"The reality is that there are more residents exposed to coastal flooding here than in any other major city in New Zealand. As climate change causes sea levels to rise, our low lying coastal and inland communities are increasingly likely to experience more frequent flooding, as well as the effects of other coastal hazards.

"It is imperative we start planning now for how we respond and adapt to those hazards," Acting Mayor Turner says.

Councillors from the Banks Peninsula, Heathcote, Linwood, Burwood, Coastal and Innes wards will be members of the working group. Two representatives from Te Rūnanaga o Ngāi Tahu – one from Ngāi Tūāhuriri and one representing the four runanga in Banks Peninsula - will also be invited to be part of the group, which will report to the Urban Development and Transport Committee.

The Coastal Hazards Adaptation Planning Programme is one of the two projects the working group will focus on. This is an ongoing, longer term programme which seeks to address existing risks and exposure from coastal hazards over the next 100 years through a structured community engagement process.

The other project the working group will focus on relates to changing the Christchurch District Plan so that it is aligned with the New Zealand Coastal Policy Statement.

Christchurch Adventure Park

What exactly does it offer and how good is their chairlift?

Just a couple of questions that we, at the Lyttelton Harbour Information Centre wanted to find answers to, so we went there for a visit.

As you drive over Dyers Pass/Pukeatua to the city the park is down to your left. A little naked from the fire two years ago but that didn't take the trails away, just exposed them. The drive into the base gently fills with pine trees that surround the wooden buildings of guest services, hire shop and large café. Untouched by the fire these large trees are reminiscent of mountain chalets and the shade from produces and cool feel with the scent of pine.

The park's main purpose is to service the mountain biker who enjoys heading down hill without the effort of cycling uphill! The chair lift picks up the bike and then its rider for a gentle, relaxing, transportation to the top of the park. From here the rider can choose from a variety of levels of downward route that twist and wind down and around the valley and hills. The absence of trees does not hinder the experience but does make it more exposed to the sun and rain! The thrill of a downhill ride cannot be taken away by weather alone though. Passes vary from 1 trip to 5 or 10 or a half or full day pass as many as you can handle. Currently the 6-month pass is being offered at $699 which is better value than a season ski pass at present!

We were not taking our bikes but took the $20 ($15 for students and seniors, $10 for youth, under 10 free) chair lift pass that enabled us a ride up and down. Tranquil and a bit chilly are the words that came to mind, glad I took my hat! However on arrival at the top the sunshine warmed and enhanced the absolutely stunning views. Towards our harbour the blue of the sea made the land stand strong with just a mist rising from far out the end of the Harbours Ocean. Looking north towards Christchurch the clouds hid the mountains for us but on a clear day you truly would see for miles, a 230° vista from the Ocean to the east, across the City and continuing round the hill over the southern plains. There is a designated walking track if you fancy the challenge, that enables you to reach the top for free and then glide gently back down on a chair lift. Either walking or by lift it is worth it to admire the view and value the place we call home.

The Park does cater for every level of cyclist. A pump track and free small trail for kids is designed to introduce beginners to the experience of the longer mountain trails. No bike on your trip to Christchurch, well don't worry you can hire one complete with safety gear. OR not keen to cycle but fancy an adrenalin rush, you can take the zip line! Bragging the highest and longest zip line in New Zealand it runs over the park 150m high and just over one kilometre in length, there are 4 lines that make the total length. Definitely a tempting adventure for a few of our volunteers...next time.

After any level of excursion or adventure there is the need for a treat which the Village café covers well, ice cream, cakes and chips with coffee, juice or beer to accompany them. Then before heading home you can wash your bike off and check the tyres in the tranquillity of this regenerating forest. It may have lost some trees but not its feeling of beauty and adventure.

Thank you to Christchurch Adventure park for sharing their facility with us. I recommend using the voucher you received with your rates bill for a $10 trip on the chair lift and a relax in the trees. For the bikers amongst you this is a must.

Bush Farm School

What is it all About?

For many of us, lockdown taught us that it was the simple things in life that mattered. That we live in a too fast and hurried world and slowing down was the opportunity to see things slightly differently. Many of us were exploring our local trails, discovering the intricacies of rockpool and beach life, as well as seeing our backyard in a whole new light. It's often these real-world situations where learning for our tamariki come alive. Away from the classroom and into the community.

This is the daily focus for life at Bush Farm School that is based in Orton Bradley Park (in the spring and summer terms), and at Maanaki Mai in Purau in the winter months. We come together, one day a week over term time to experience the curriculum outside through a mixture of structured learning and free play. We explore through authentic hands-on, meaningful learning. Imagine the opportunity where weighing sheep becomes our maths, discovering local pest populations becomes our social sciences, harvesting local plants become our mātauranga māori, building electric fences becomes our science, and the everyday kōrero/ conversation becomes our oral language. Every term at Bush Farm School, we focus on the seasons, on what nature is offering us. We move from the ngāhere/ the bush, to the moana/ the sea to finally the farm.

Our emphasis is on an inclusive approach - belonging and wellbeing - on how we are part of this ecosystem and the positive benefits we gain from our interaction with it. Group time is rich with karakia, waiata, storytelling and opportunities to nurture and connect to themselves. Free play is affirming the (your) child's ability to learn at their own pace. Structured learning cycles is making connections between people, place and things in our world through working theories (Traditional Māori and Western Science). We aim to give our tamariki opportunities to believe in their capacity to influence their thoughts and action in a fast and changing eco-system.

The Forest Schools began in Scandinavia in the 1950s to become part of the curriculum. Authorities saw that children who had regular outdoor experiences had strong social skills, high self-esteem and confidence, and the ability to work in groups effectively. This movement has now spread across the UK and North America, where agencies realise the powerful effect it has.

Bush Farm School began in 2018 to incorporate a blend of Forest School, Mātaraunga Māori and Education for Sustainability. Currently, Bush Farm has tamariki who come from as far as Sumner and Wigram, as well as schools in Whakaraupō. This term, we are working in collaboration with several external agencies to provide an opportunity to dive deeper into our local marine life as citizen scientists. Term 4 will be back on the farm.

Bush Farm School operates the One Day School on Thursdays for 5 - 13-year-olds, and our Little Guardian Programme on Wednesdays for 4.5 - 7-year-olds. Both these programmes meet Ministry of Education requirements (section 25b, 71) and have a robust Health and Safety Management Plan. Our fees are $10-$12/ hour. We ask for a full-term commitment. Spaces still available.

We also collaborate with local artisans to bring quality holiday programmes to you. We have a mixture of adult-child sessions, and children only. Anything, from crafting from fire, whittling, felting and making use with what nature offers us. These are incorporated into our teaching sessions. Pest Free Banks Peninsula receives $5 million funding

Minister of Conservation Eugenie Sage has announced that Predator Free 2050 Limited will provide $5.11 million to the ambitious, community-led Pest Free Banks Peninsula (PFPB) project.

The funding will create 15 new jobs and enable predator eradication over large parts of Banks Peninsula and Kaitōrete. The announcement was made on 9 August at an event on pest-free Ōtamahua/Quail Island in Whakaraupō/Lyttelton Harbour.

Collaborative approach to PFPB vision

The funding agreement was signed by Predator Free 2050 Limited Acting CEO Prof Dan Tompkins and Banks Peninsula Conservation Trust Chair Mark Christensen, on behalf of the 14 organisations signed up to the PFPB vision to be pest-free.

Christensen said: "In November 2018 we agreed to work together as landowners, community groups, iwi, councils and Department of Conservation so that our native plants, birds, animals and insects are flourishing on Banks Peninsula, free from the threats of introduced animal pests.

"Today, the realisation of this vision has taken a significant leap forward."

Environment Canterbury Chair Jenny Hughey said it was great to see collaborative efforts across the region being supported by central government. Environment Canterbury was also committed to this vision, both financially and philosophically.

"It will benefit many special native species, such as the jewelled gecko, which are threatened with extinction if we do not remove pests."

Local Ngāi Tahu rūnanga are also strongly engaged in the project and working with the community to restore these sites.

Funding supports eradication focus

The programme will focus on the eradication of possums and suppression of mustelids, rats and feral cats to low levels. Possum and goat numbers on Banks Peninsula have been reduced significantly in recent years and there are many well-established trapping programmes.

Prof Tompkins said that Banks Peninsula was the tenth largest landscape project funded by Predator Free 2050 Limited.

"We now have projects established on the country's major peninsulas, where geography helps meet the aim of removing predators and protecting from reinvasion. These are important pathfinder investments that enable communities, landowners and iwi to protect and return natural taonga."

While the PFPB vision covers eradication of pests over the entire 110,000 hectares of the peninsula by 2050, the funding will go towards predator eradication over 23,000 hectares of an extended Wildside area in the south east of the peninsula as well as 5,500 hectares on Kaitōrete. These areas are rich in biodiversity, can be readily defended and scaled up as the project extends in the future.

Pest control efforts by landowners on the south-east Wildside area of Banks Peninsula have already contributed to the recovery of endangered populations of hōiho/yellow-eyed penguins, kororā/little blue penguins and tītī/sooty shearwater. Tūi have also been successfully reintroduced.

Editorial Note - Elections 2020

The team at the Lyttelton Review have come up with a series of questions for the political candidates standing for Banks Peninsula. Each candidate was asked to write up to 100 words per question and submit their responses by Friday August 14th.

Due to the unexpected return of Covid -19 and the impact on election candidates we have only had one response for this edition of the Review. We will give the candidates further opportunities to submit their answers in coming editions of the Lyttelton Review.

Catherine Chu National Party

Q: Tell us a bit about yourself – why you would be good in the role and your greatest achievement so far in life.

A: Born and raised in Christchurch, I entered the University of Canterbury at the age of 15 and graduated with a Bachelor of Arts. My professional career over the last 6 years has been in the Banking and Finance sector with my most recent role being an Authorised Financial Advisor with the Bank of New Zealand. However, ultimately my commitment to giving back to our community has also led me to a passion in community and public service. I have been a member of the Rotary Club since 2014 and have been involved in Local Government since 2016.

Q: What are your views on sustainable tourism?

A: Absolutely support sustainable tourism. The closure of New Zealand's borders and ongoing domestic business restrictions due to Covid-19 are posing an enormous challenge to the tourism industry. We need to provide an incentive for tourism businesses to invest in the sector, to facilitate opportunities by funding innovative ideas, and to encourage new options for tourism markets to ensure that we continue to support sustainable tourism.

Covid-19 has posed a direct challenge to the industry and National's Tourism Accelerator is one tool we can use to help the industry rebuild and bounce back.

Q: What initiatives do you support to address our climate emergency?

A: We are committed to tackling the climate emergency in a measured and responsible way. Everyone has a role to play as we rise to the challenge of transitioning to a low emissions economy as this is truly a global issue requiring a global response. We have 5 principles to guide NZ in moving to a low carbon economy, ensuring environmental protection and economic growth go hand in hand: Science-based, technologically driven (so that we achieve emissions reductions by adopting new technologies rather than reducing sector activity), long-term incentives, global response (in pace with our global trading partners) and economic impact.

Q: Banks Peninsula is a special place. What is your highest priority for our area?

A: Our electorate is a diverse and an exciting electorate full of hardworking Kiwis. It is an absolute privilege to be your candidate. My biggest priority is to ensure you feel valued as a resident. I will listen to our residents to understand what is important to you and our community and make sure your concerns are heard and ensure actions are taken. I know trust isn't something one can ask for as it needs to be earned, but I am willing to work hard to make sure I deliver results for you so that I can earn your trust.

Naval Point Club News from the Manager

This week Charlotte, Bruce Hall and I attended both The University of Canterbury & Lincoln University for their volunteer expos. Using the replica America's Cup was certainly a drawcard and the amount of interest we were able to generate towards volunteering at NPCL was heartening. On that note a volunteer training weekend (for new and existing volunteers) is programmed in September.

Like most clubs Naval Point relies heavily on donations, sponsorship and grant funding to operate. We have been actively seeking out these opportunities and in the past month have received over $30,000 in grants from the New Zealand Community Trust, Rata Foundation and Pub Charity to cover wages, IT equipment and general operational expenses. On behalf of the board and members I thank these organisations for their support of Naval Point Club Lyttelton. We also acknowledge our sponsors; The Professionals Christchurch, Oborn's Nautical & Whisky Galore for their ongoing and continued support of our sport, and to our newest sponsor Vining's Marine. Moving forward we have some exciting new sponsorship opportunities ranging from becoming a race day sponsor through to naming rights on one of our fleet of Elliott 6's. With sponsorships commencing from $250 and a range of sponsor benefits if you, your business or a business you know of would like to get involved please send me an email manager@navalpoint.co.nz.

All CCC Venues Require Sign In

People visiting all Christchurch City Council facilities are required to sign in using the national COVID Tracer app and scanning the QR code. For those people who do not have a smartphone, a sign-in register will be available on entry.

While the Council's public facilities will remain open under COVID-19 Alert Level 2, people must maintain physical distancing. This follows a decision by Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern in response to cases of community transmission in Auckland.

Council Incident Management Team Leader Mary Richardson says all visitors must provide their contact details via the COVID Tracer app or a sign-in register on entry to Council facilities.

"We will have QR codes at all the entry points," she says.

"If you have not already done so, please download the Tracer app from the Ministry of Health website. It helps ensure your safety and protect those in your wider community."

Ms Richardson says even if the region moves back to Level 1, the Council will still strongly encourage people to use the Tracer app.

"It is important that we work together as a team and follow guidelines and instructions in order to hold on to our hard-won gains," she says.

Busy C's Preschool News

Busy C's PreSchool News

At Busy C's we have a wonderful extended environment up the back of the preschool where we go to play on the climbing wall, look after our heihei / chickens, and spend time in our green nature space. We have been enjoying this, and outings out in the community to explore our wider Lyttelton play spaces...

During the week our tamariki set up a campsite at preschool with a tent, a campfire, cooking equipment and also sleeping bags. They were excited to share and make up lots of cool stories from their own camping experiences. We sang songs, played instruments, and read books as we sat around the campfire. This imaginary play links past experiences while creating new ones - plus provides self-motivated opportunities for problem solving, practising social skills, enriching language, and co-constructing knowledge.

The older tamariki had so much fun making music during our camping experience that they chose to share the experience with our younger tamariki - joining them in the Under Two area and leading a music session. This is an example of "ako" (learning from each other) that we love at Busy Cs! It was fantastic - with singing, musical instruments, scarves and full body rhythmical moving to the beat - which everyone was totally into. We have a great lot of leaders showing confidence, initiative and respect for each other. Yay!

Hello people, bears and everyfluffy,

You are never too old to learn new things, so when I strolled past the Whakaraupō (Lyttelton Harbour) Carving Centre some weeks ago, I was intrigued to have a look inside and perhaps try my paw on working on wood. Right in that moment I bumped into a friendly man named Damian, who works there, and he encouraged me to visit and find out what beautiful artworks and useful items the carvers are creating in the big shed on Godley Quay.

When I looked at their website and read that you must not approach the experts (tohunga whakairo) while they are carving, due to the special (tapu) nature of their work, I thought it would be better to make an appointment. I called the office where Yvette Couch-Lewis helps out after a staff change. She was surely a bit surprised to talk to a bear but was not opposed to the idea that a furry individual wanted to get insight into Māori carving. I was lucky enough to visit last week before the social distancing rules kicked in again. The Master himself, Caine Tauwhare, gave me an introduction to his art. I was even allowed to use a chisel on a commissioned work of a moko moko – that's a variation of a lizard. He also showed me the intricate details of a pou – a tall post – he is working on. This pou is made up of three panels and will eventually be displayed at the marae in Aranui. I also helped Damian on a huge trough, made of totara, that will be used by a community group for kneading bread dough. I made quite a few wood chips fly into the air and the trough.

The carving shed is cold, and my apron didn't help much in my attempt to keep my clothes clean. It would have been perfect if I had worked standing like the two carvers. But I am more of a sitting bear when tasks get difficult, so I had to clean my bottom more than once after sitting in the dust and wielding chisels, knives and gouges. The carvers also use axes and heavy machinery when they cut big pieces of timber off a tree trunk, like e.g. the chunk of an old totara Damian needed for the trough. The wood was very light-coloured because the tree had grown out in the open. If a totara grows under a canopy, the timber is orangey-red, and dark chocolate-coloured wood comes from a swamp.

Before the whakairo – the ancient Māori art of wood carving – starts, the carvers draw the design on paper. But Caine says sometimes the timber has different ideas and you have to work around it; therefore the drawing is only a guide. They give the tree a new life by honouring what it was. As so many things Māori do, the carving is based on traditions and reflects tikanga – their cultural values and beliefs. The carvings tell stories, says Caine, and this is so much more than what is sold in the souvenir shops. He says: "You need the local knowledge to read them because the carvings uphold the values of our ancestors and the mana and prestige of this area." For Māori, the carvings are what our words and letters of the alphabet are, says Caine: "They are our written language."

Caine had to learn quite a bit about the Lyttelton Harbour area before he was able to tell stories through carving at the Whakaraupō centre. That's because he grew up in the North Island, in Ngāruawāhia, the home of the Kingitanga, the Māori king and the Tūrangawaewae marae. Through his mother's side of the family he learnt about the meaning and symbols from his uncles. He didn't know his father, who was from the Ngāi Tahu iwi, but started to do research on his whakapapa when he was in the army here in the south, and he felt this was his place. But at the time the South Island was no place to learn carving, so he had to go back to the north to learn it from his uncles and cousins, and in the meantime Caine is an accomplished artist and teacher.

The Whakaraupō Carving Centre was founded by Caine's aunty Dawn ten years ago. It is run as a not-for-profit trust that receives funding from many organisations and offers mentorship and education to community and school groups. Just while we were chatting, a young man popped in and said he wanted to learn carving, and he was shown around. As I could experience first-paw, the centre is also a great and friendly place for bears like me. The centre also helps with the re-integration of young people who have been released from prison. They usually work on more simple objects, some of which are colourfully painted and displayed in the carving centre.

Caine, Damian and Yvette all live in Rāpaki, the last Māori bastion within the harbour, as Caine calls it. It is their "place to stay", a harvesting and ancestral place. As I left, I thought I should re-visit some carvings that have been made by Caine. At the marina you see Te Ana O Huikai, this means: sheltering place of Huikai. Huikai was an ancestor who stayed in this area when he visited his son Tautahi who had a big market garden in Port Levy. A bit closer to the Woolshed is the landing place for his waka, you see a big carved Māori guy looking across the harbour. On Norwich Quay, next to Fisherman's Wharf, you find Hinehouroko who once lived in this area known as Ohinehou. The newest and quite large piece of art is at the Timeball Station, it talks about the traditional Māori means of navigation. Then it's time for a coffee at Albion Square which is also adorned by Māori carvings, and funny enough, just when I arrived there, Caine and Damian hopped out of their car. I am sure they won't forget me any time soon.
