Marvellous Molecules and Mitochondria

Have you ever talked to a tree? I once sat in a town garden beneath a Pittosporum tree, also called Lemonwood or Tarata. The garden was on a busy street and with no companion native trees around it and no native birds in its branches, the tree seemed to me to be lonely. And so, I talked to it of the native bush where its brothers and sisters grew and of the kereru and piwakawaka flying amongst the branches.

And as I did so I realised that the carbon dioxide in my breath was almost certainly passing through tiny pores into the tree's leaves. And as the sun shone the tiny green chloroplasts in the leaves were able to capture the sunlight and use the energy to split molecules of water that had moved up the tree from the soil, wet from the previous night's rain. Inside the chloroplasts the hydrogen from the water molecules was being combined with the carbon dioxide from my breath to make a molecule of glucose. The oxygen from the water molecule was not needed by the leaf and so passed out of the leaf into the air. I put my face into the branches so I could breathe in the discarded oxygen. It passed from my lungs into my blood and entered all the cells in my body.

In each cell of every living creature are the tiny power houses called mitochondria and there the oxygen was used to break down the glucose, the digested starch molecules from my sandwich lunch. The glucose carried energy which had been captured from the sun days, weeks, months, earlier, in a field of wheat. The stored energy once released enabled the processes in my body which kept me alive. At the same time the carbon dioxide from the broken glucose molecule was carried by my blood to my lungs and I breathed it out. I marvelled that what had been part of my body was now built into the tree's cells maybe becoming nectar in its tiny flowers to be carried away by a visiting bee.

When I was student in the 1950s studying Botany I remember the excitement one morning amongst the teaching staff. A scientific paper in a prestigious journal had appeared that day revealing that scientists had finally been able to work out Krebs Cycle, the chain of molecular steps involved in the process of respiration, releasing energy from food, which goes on in the mitochondria of all living cells, from seaweed to giant kauri, from a tiny insect to a blue whale and this it has been happening for perhaps a billion years or more. A continuous cycle of atoms and molecules, driven by the sun's light, and made manifest in a multitude of breathing lifeforms, an exquisite diversity of shapes and colours and sounds, in shared and ordered mutuality.

Ten Years Strong

Lyttelton Review Celebrates

Looking back, it's amazing to think we have been telling Lyttelton Harbour Stories for ten years!

Over the years I have been the main writer. Lynnette Baird wrote stories and did all the design work until early 2015 and Jenny-Lee Love has been the production designer ever since.

Below is a summary of key events the Lyttelton Review has shared with you since our first edition June 27th, 2011! For those first couple of years, we published weekly! There was so much information surrounding the earthquake recovery. By 7th October 2013 we had published 100 editions! As earthquake recovery information slowed, we moved to publishing every two weeks and our focus turned to celebrating our local community and providing a general overview of everything that was going on locally. For a brief period in 2020 during the Covid Lockdown we resumed publishing more frequently. Amazingly we were the only local paper able to publish in this area. Not relying on advertising material for production costs, having a mostly online presence and close community contacts enabled us to do this.

A big thank you to our funders over the years - the Christchurch City Council - Strengthening Communities Funding - ACTIS Information Eastern Hub 2017 & 2018 and COVID-19 Media Support Package administered by Manatū Taonga | Ministry for Culture & Heritage. Your support has enabled us to inform our local community about essential information and general news stories from community groups and businesses and locals.

A big shout out to all of you who send information to us. To various people who have been regular contributors over the years, Helen Dungey, the late John Denton, The Diamond Harbour Writers Group, Chats Duncan, Clive Keightley, Kimi Able, Alex Hallatt, Melissa Miles and our newest contributor, Patricia Scott a big thank you.

Finally, a huge thank you to all our readers. To this day we continue to get messages of support from you.

Lots has happened in and around our Harbour from 2011 -2021. Enjoy remembering the last decade of stories from this community.

Article Lyttelton Review

For many months, each Wednesday morning two women have been coming to Lyttelton, one with a camera and the other with her bucket of brushes and odds and ends. They have come to catalogue the two cemeteries in Lyttelton for the New Zealand Genealogical Society (Canterbury Branch). Their work in the Anglican Cemetery is complete, they are now at the Catholic and Dissenters Cemetery in Reserve Terrace.

For Kathy Bisman and Lorraine Wilmshurst this is a labour of love. Whilst Lorraine takes all the photos of the graves, Kathy tidies the site up and clears the headstones so they can reveal the details of the grave. "One handy trick that I learnt is to sprinkle flour over the headstone. That helps reading faded transcripts", said Kathy. The information they are collating will update the gravesite records. For every headstone they transcribe the information and take photos. Finding some of the graves is tricky and some of the headstones are gone. "We work guided by the existing New Zealand Genealogical Society records that were transcribed in 1978. They can be found in the New Zealand Genealogical Society Canterbury Branch Library collection", said Lorraine. "These documents are a really handy way to find your way around the cemeteries", she says.

Standing in the Reserve Terrace cemetery with these two knowledgeable women I have discovered a few things that I didn't know about this site. "The cemetery is divided into three sections", said Lorraine. If you stand near the gate at the bottom of the cemetery you can see the middle part of the site is for returned service men/women and is a Commonwealth Graves Memorial site. To the right of that all the graves are for dissenters. Dissenters were people who broke away from the Roman Catholic Church. People who were Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists were classed as dissenters in days gone by. To the left of the war graves is the Catholic Cemetery. "It's quite amazing to see all the graves of the Sisters from the Convent. In particular on the headstones, you get the nuns full names as well as their religious name", said Lorraine.

Each week the two ladies connect with many visitors to the cemetery. Some people are locals, and many others are visitors coming to trace their family history. "I don't think many people have an understanding of just how many people from all parts of the world are buried here. There is a magnificent treasure trove of railway and maritime history surrounding the graves", said Lorraine. Sometimes the pair are so intrigued in what they find that they do additional research to find out more. One such case was someone who was buried in the Anglican Cemetery and mention was made of drowning on the SS Tatarua. Turns out back in 1881 this ship struck a reef off the Catlins and 131 people were killed. It was the worst civilian maritime disaster of the time.

They have found graves from people who died in the flu pandemic, people who have been killed in accidents on the harbour, famous people from the early days of the settlement and the list goes on. They find unfamiliar headstone markings.

"LRPSI is one that I had never seen before. After some research I found this meant the man was a surgeon", said Kathy.

I asked them if there were some headstones that really appealed to them. They said they give themselves the luxury of having four favourite headstones per cemetery. Kathy's favourites are the ones she can trace to her own family history. Kathy has a lifelong connection to the Peninsula. For Lorraine, she wasn't born in these parts, so she is drawn to the gravestones with lovely words. Her favourite poem is on a headstone in this cemetery.

The pair have been doing this work for the past nine years. They have documented the headstones, plaques, monuments and honour boards in Akaroa, Lyttelton, Purau, Le Bons Bay, Duvauchelle and Port Levy to name a few. Sometimes they get the opportunity to visit a private burial site. They have been very impressed with how helpful people have been. Keys have been left so that they can enter small churches to view the memorial plaques and if they have identified special objects people have been willing to give them access.

They have one cemetery left to document to complete Banks Peninsula.

They would love to see more public information available at all the cemeteries so that relatives and visitors can find out information more easily. "It would also be fabulous if the council could fund some interpretation panels and provide some seating at the cemeteries to make a visit to the cemetery more enjoyable".

Meanwhile in the short term, if you are at the cemetery in Reserve Terrace on a Wednesday morning you will find these two women. A local lady from Exeter Street joins them occasionally to help them on their journey of discovery.

Long-Term Plan 2021-31 adopted

Priorities and transformational change:
Long-Term Plan 2021-31 adopted

The Canterbury Regional Council has formally adopted the Long-Term Plan 2021-31. The plan sets the course for the Council's work in the region – the essential priorities, statutory obligations, and transformational opportunities.

What it means for Canterbury

"The human impact on the environment is at the forefront of local and global thinking – it is the issue of the age," says Environment Canterbury Chair Jenny Hughey.

"The Long-Term Plan acknowledges that there is much to be done in the region and some big challenges coming down the line. But it also gives us the opportunity to be transformational – something the community has been asking of us.

"The plan is our commitment to the community to improve environmental outcomes across the region – to accelerate change while balancing affordability and the region's need to recover economically from COVID-19.

"From improving water quality and enhancing biodiversity, to managing natural hazards and climate change adaptation, the Long-Term Plan is our vision for stopping the decline in our environment and actively improving things for future generations.

"The plan was developed with our partner Ngāi Tahu, and with the help and guidance of the many submissions we received from across the region during the consultation period. Sincere thanks to all of you who took the time to make a submission," says Chair Hughey.

Key aspects of the Long-Term Plan 2021-31

The plan groups Environment Canterbury's work into five portfolios: Water and Land; Biodiversity and Biosecurity; Air Quality, Transport and Urban Development; Climate Change and Community Resilience; and Regional and Strategic Leadership.

Key initiatives include:

- Implementing the Government's Essential Freshwater Package and developing a new Regional Policy Statement and Regional Coastal Environment Plan.
- Implementing the Canterbury Regional Pest Management Plan, plus surveillance initiatives to reduce the risk of pests becoming established.
- Accelerating the protection and regeneration of the natural environment, including community-based initiatives, such as Me Uru Rākau, that enable landowners and groups to protect and regenerate ecological catchments.
- Developing a climate change action plan.
- Continuing to design, build and maintain high-quality flood protection, land drainage and erosion control infrastructure.
- Delivering quality, cost-effective public transport that meets the needs of the community and increases patronage.
- Promoting community participation in Council decision making, including investment in youth engagement and education, such as through the Enviroschools programme.

Zoomers

Artists Against Slavery presents, Zoomers; an exhibition of work by four talented young artists from Generation Z. Breana Vosper, Bronte Lovell, Hinnie Hobeyn and Joel Graham are high school students who all live in Diamond Harbour and attend Cashmere High School. They will be donating 10% of the sale price of their artworks sold to Artists Against Slavery.

Breana Vosper comes from an artistic family and has been painting most of her life, currently using oils, watercolour and acrylic. Her work has undergone a major evolution over the past year, as she refines the way she views her subject matter. She especially enjoys painting scenes of nature and different light forms.

Bronte Lovell is 17 years-old and creates comics, characters and stories with digital art. She also loves painting, which is what she has experimented with in this exhibition.

Hinnie Hobeyn has lived in Diamond Harbour her entire life. She is a self-taught artist, drawing "ever since she was able to pick up a pencil". Her art spans a variety of mediums, with her favourite style line art/pencil drawings.

Joel Graham focuses on portraits and figures. He often draws on a childhood spent partly in Afghanistan, where his parents worked in aid and development work helping trafficked women and children. He also has experience in animation, which leads to a sense of movement in many of his paintings.

Predator Free Backyards Funding

The Predator Free Backyards programme offers funding for communities who wish to trap predators in their backyards, in order to help native species, thrive. We select outstanding predator free communities from around the country and give them funding to purchase trapping equipment. On top of that, we offer these groups ongoing support, information and advice.

Our goal is to have a trap in every 5th backyard in towns, suburbs and neighbourhoods in New Zealand Aotearoa who want to make their community predator free.

Funding round now open — closes 18 July 2021

Funding covers the purchase of humane traps, pre-made tunnels and materials to make your own tunnels. Humane traps are those that have been tested and meet the National Animal Welfare Advisory Committee (NAWAC) standard.
